

Website Privacy Statement

This site has been developed as a public resource for those persons seeking information about the work of the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Nova Scotia and access to information and privacy rights.

The Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Nova Scotia respects an individual's right to privacy when utilizing online services. We are committed to providing a site that respects the privacy of our visitors. The purpose of this Website Privacy Statement is to outline how we govern the operations and management of our website for you (the visitor) to consider.

Please note, the nature of the Internet is such that we cannot guarantee or warrant the security of any information you transmit to us via the Internet. No data transmission over the Internet can be guaranteed to be 100% secure. However, we will take all reasonable steps (including appropriate technical and organizational measures) to protect your personal data.

Our website currently does not use any cookies or tracking devices during your visit. However, our web server automatically collects information about a visitor's computer, such as its Internet Protocol (IP) address and browser version. This information is used in aggregate form for statistical purposes only and we do not use it to identify a specific person directly.

The search engine used by our website is a Google product and as such follows the privacy of the parent company. You may view Google's website policy for further information.

If you visit any of the visible external links listed on our web page, we cannot guarantee the following: the content of their sites, how they use personal information, or their privacy practices. When entering another website, you may find that it has its own privacy policy or statement that you can review in determining whether to proceed.

All information sent to us by e-mail will be used for the sole purpose of attempting to be of assistance. Any e-mails sent to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Nova Scotia may be subject to interception. For this reason, our office does not recommend that you send us sensitive personal information. For more detailed information on our personal information handling practices, please see our Privacy Policy.

The Listserv used by the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Nova Scotia collects your e-mail address, your name and the date joined. Our office does not share this information and other Listserv users cannot access this information. The Listserv is used to electronically send out access and privacy news and recent review reports.

Some of the materials and elements on our site may be subject to copyrights held by other organizations. If such restrictions exist, you will need to seek permission from the rights holder to reproduce the material. For the bulk of what is available, this will not be the case. Non-copyrighted information and materials may be reproduced from our website by any means, without charge and without further permission from our office. Please note the information posted on our website is not the official version as endorsed by the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Nova Scotia.

Every effort is made by our staff to ensure that all of the information posted to our website is accurate. Changes to this Website Privacy Statement will be posted within 24 hours on this page.
